

Cat

Cats are small, domesticated animals known for their agility, independence, and playful behavior. They belong to the feline family, which includes larger wild cats like lions and tigers. Cats have been companions to humans for thousands of years, appreciated for their ability to hunt pests and their affectionate nature. With sharp claws and keen senses, cats are both agile and curious creatures. They come in a variety of breeds, each with distinct characteristics, such as fur patterns, eye color, and personality traits. Whether playful, lazy, or affectionate, cats bring joy to millions of homes worldwide.